Poster Abstract

A problem shared

Maimie Thompson, NHS Highland, United Kingdom
Dr Boyd Peters, NHS Highland, United Kingdom
Nigel Small, NHS Highland, United Kingdom
Kenny Rodgers, NHS Highland, United Kingdom

Correspondence to: Maimie Thompson, NHS Highland, United Kingdom, E-mail: maimie.thompson@nhs.net

Abstract

Instead of wading in with a “solution” our journey started by sharing a problem with the public. Two community hospitals 30 miles apart in a remote & rural part of Scotland are not designed to meet modern standards, are not strategically located and some community services adequately resourced. Sharing details around this issue with the public and staff resulted in a suggestion from a local public meeting that we should consider building a new unit in a more strategically better “middle” of the locality to replace the old ones. This was a solution we had wondered about but which we knew would not be owned unless it was co-produced. This started a three year process of engagement overseen by a steering group made up of community representatives, local groups, councillors, partner agencies, managers and clinicians. A formal three month public consultation followed, looking at what should be the preferred model of service delivery for the area. It is now proposed that community and social care services be expanded, staff co-located, a new hospital and community resource centre built and two community hospitals closed. The new model will be financially more efficient, strategically better and local services will be retained or improved. Now the model is agreed the strong community engagement provides an ideal platform to design and deliver the services.

Keywords

engagement; integrated; major; services; change

PowerPoint presentation

http://integratedcarefoundation.org/resource/icic15-presentations